UNO forward Troy Deane snatches a loose ball during his team's 88-86 victory over North Dakota Friday. The Mavs moved into first place in the North Central Conference with two weekend wins.

NUMBER ONE

By TONY FLOTT

U NO basketball player Terry Henderson has some advice for Maverick fans.

"We're going to be here for a while, so with this young team, they better get used to winning."

Henderson's comments followed a dramatic, 88-86, last-second victory over North Dakota which moved the Mavs into first place in the North Central Conference.

UNO followed the win with an 88-66 runaway over North Dakota State Saturday night, increasing their win streak to eight games.

The streak was kept intact Friday night thanks to senior forward Dan Olson who nailed a long-range buzzer beater.

With the Mavs trailing North Dakota 86-85 and only 12 seconds remaining in the game, Bison center Dave Vonesh stepped to the free-throw line for a one-and-one.

Vonesh, who scored 33 points in the game, missed the shot and UNO's Phil Cartwright rebounded. Cartwright passed the ball to Trent Neal who found Olson all alone on the left side.

Olson bobbled the ball, took a step back and fired the game winner as the buzzer sounded. Several hundred fans rushed onto the court following Olson's dramatics.

"I was just trying to square up my feet," Olson said. "Coach (Bob Hanson) was over there telling me to drive, but I knew there wasn't that much time left so I just pulled up and hit a jumper."

"You've just got to want the ball in that situation. That's what you play for."

GETTING THE WHEELS ROLLING

The College of Public Affairs and Community Service (CPACS) has begun the process of planning doctoral programs, according to CPACS Dean David Hinton. Although a timetable has not been set, Hinton listed three CPACS departments as likely targets of the programs.

I'LL SEE YOU IN COURT

UNO's Mock Trial Team took to the courts in Des Moines last week, finishing in the top half of the 88-team tournament. Kent Kirwan, the team's coach, said the competition "really puts you on the griddle."

HOW I JOINED THE ARMY

The University of Nebraska Medical Center's Chancellor Charles Andrews said his childhood dream was to become a physician. Andrews recaps his medical history beginning with infancy school and the jump to the Medical Center.

CPACS plans for doctorates

Program called a 'natural evolution' for the college

By GREG KOZOL

David Hinton, the College of Public Affairs and Community Service (CPACS) dean, said he was not surprised by the announcement that CPACS could begin planning doctoral programs.

"We've actually looked at the possibility of getting doctoral programs for the last 10 years," Hinton said. "But Chancellor (Del) Weber's announcement will certainly speed up the process."

On Feb. 14, Weber announced UNO has been authorized to begin planning its first doctoral-level programs.

Weber mentioned four CPACS departments, social work, gerontology, criminal justice and public administration as possible UNO doctoral programs.

Hinton said doctoral programs would add to the continued growth of CPACS, which was established in 1971.

"This is a natural evolution of the college," he said. "We've had remarkable growth in less than 20 years."

Hinton said when doctoral programs were considered in 1977, the college was not ready.

"I remember a fairly extensive process," he said. "The college was probably not at the state it needed to be in terms of resources and in terms of the number of faculty."

But CPACS has grown to the level of a doctoral degree granting college, Hinton said.

"I am confident we have the faculty with the appropriate research and instructional capabilities," he said.

The next step in planning doctoral programs, Hinton said, is for the faculty to look into the feasibility of developing the programs.

"It's too early to specify if the faculty will make that decision," he said. "We will have an idea of where we intend to go by the end of the semester."

Hinton said the college seems prepared to "immediately explore" doctoral programs in criminal justice, gerontology and public administration.

The CPACS programs are nationally accredited, Hinton said.

Mavs win! Mavs win!

-DAVE WEAVER

UNO Maverick Dan Olson steps around a defender during Friday night's win over the North Dakota Fighting Sioux. Olson, the only senior on the team, sank a game-winning, last second shot for an 88-86 Maverick victory.

Also, UNO's statewide responsibility in several CPACS departments makes the need for doctoral programs greater, he said.

"We have a state-wide mandate," he said. "The potential for duplication of programs is limited."

UNO offers social work and gerontology courses at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, Hinton said.

Courses leading to an undergraduate degree in criminal justice and a masters degree in public administration are also offered in Lincoln, he said.

Hinton also dismissed statements made by University of Nebraska Regent John Payne in the Feb. 16 issue of the Gateway that a UNO doctoral program in gerontology would duplicate an existing program at the University of Nebraska Medical Center.

The Medical Center offers a geriatrics doctorate, which focuses on health-related aspects of aging, Hinton said.

Gerontology, Hinton said, deals with the social and economic factors of aging. Doctorates in both programs are needed in Nebraska, he added.

However, the possibility of resource sharing between universities makes sense, Hinton said.

"There are a number of possibilities for joint programs at UNO, UNL or the Medical Center," he said.

A joint doctoral program in educational administration has been mentioned between UNO and UNL.

With doctoral programs, CPACS will continue to meet the community's needs, Hinton said.

"We are on the cutting edge of a number of social arenas."

'Poverty in America is found in diapers'

Lamm identifies challenge of 1990s

By MICHELLE FLYR

Americans need to think in different terms, said Richard Lamm, former governor of Colorado.

Lamm was the featured speaker at the Academy, Business and Community (ABC) breakfast Feb. 21 at the Holiday Inn Central.

"We are sailing into a brave new world of public policy," Lamm said. "World War III is going to be an economic and not a military war, and right now that's one we're losing."

In 1967, Lamm was elected to the Colorado Legislature. He said at the time America was doubling its wealth.

But now the United States has the lowest productivity growth in the industrial world and has become a debtor nation, he said.

One reason, Lamm said, is the United States cannot afford its social commitments.

"Being in government today is like sleeping with a blanket that's too short," he said. "There are not enough resources to cover the commitments already made."

When the 1980s began, several nations owed the United States money, Lamm said. But now the United States imports most of its goods and is in debt to other countries.

Also, each year the United States consumes 4 percent more than it can produce, Lamm said.

"The challenge of the 1990s will be to meet new public needs with limited resources," he said.

The challenge will not be easily answered, Lamm said.

"We're going to have to make some hard choices and attack some sacred cows," he said.

Lamm said he feels the United States needs to reassess its values.

The elderly, he said, comprise about 12 percent of the population, but they receive 57 percent of all federal, social spending.

He said something is wrong with a society where 500,000 millionaires receive Social Security checks, while 600,000 women gave birth last year without prenatal care.

"We have the highest life expectancy of any country in the world, but we're 24th in infant mortality," he said. "Poverty in America is found in diapers."

Americans spend 12 percent of every dollar on health care, Lamm said. However, he said the United States does not keep its people as healthy as other nations.

Lamm said worldwide, American males rank 15th in life expectancy while females are ranked eighth. He said the United States does not spend its money wisely.

Thousands of dollars are spent to keep individuals alive by machines, while numerous children die each year without adequate care, he said.

"We talk about the right to die as if we have a right to refuse," Lamm said. "In America it is almost against the law to die in peace."

He said the challenge will be to eliminate excesses and realize America has become over indulgent. The United States wants more from government than people are willing to pay, Lamm said.

The speech was the final installment of 1989-90 ABC breakfast series.

UNO Chancellor Del Weber said during the series, attendance averaged about 1,000 people.

Save the dolphins

Tuna will remain a staple of campus diners despite the efforts of students at two campuses to have the fish banned from their cafeteria menus.

Groups at the State University of New York at Buffalo (SUNY) and the University of Colorado at Boulder (CU) asked their food services to stop serving tuna because dolphins often drown in the nets used to catch the fish. Colorado students also wanted to ban veal.

Both campus food services have turned down the students' request.

Buffalo officials did agree to offer students an alternative. "Neptuna," which is made from pilchard fish, will be served in the cafeterias along with tuna fish. SUNY dining halls will display posters saying "Save the Dolphins, Choose Neptuna."

"It surprises me. I thought that students might have bigger issues to be concerned about than dolphins," said Clark DeHaven, executive director of National Association of College and University Food Services.

Yet after CU animal rights activists persuaded the Residence Hall Representative Council (RHRC) to survey students, 75 percent of the 1,100 dorm residents questioned said they wanted tuna banned from the menus.

Derrick Hodovance, co-chairman of the council, said food service director Jack Kemper will not take action until at least 75 percent of all 6,000 dorm residents on campus agree to banning tuna from the menu.

A more complete survey will be conducted later this spring. However, even if students vote overwhelmingly to ban tuna or veal, the RHRC can only make a recommendation. Food services will not be bound by the recommendation.

"Even if we decide we want to boycott both products, all we can do is make a suggestion," Hodovance said.

Band's name not a game

A University of South Florida student lost her job as the school's production director after she refused to censor a flier advertising a campus concert by a band called Elvis Hitler.

Brian Tannebaum, student government president, said he didn't rehire Kristen Loomis, who booked the heavy metal band, partly because she refused to change fliers promoting the band's Feb. 15 concert to "Elvis Hi-ler."

"There was a lot of concern on campus by both Jewish and non-Jewish students," Tannebaum said. "I just can't let free speech hamper complaints about an ethnic or radical slur."

"There aren't any swastikas (on the fliers) or anything," Loomis said.

The band, which plays fast-paced "psy-chabilly" tunes, received $400 from student fees for the concert.

"It's a joke," said John Paul Williams of Electric Artists, the band's promoter. The band's title is meant to be facetious, he said. "Most people take it tongue-in-cheek."

CAMPUS ACCESS

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR AND OPINION

It's cheesy, but it's true

Sometimes it's easy to overlook the "little guys."

After almost a year of working with UNO's University Relations, the current Gateway staff would like to say "thanks."

The job of trying to keep UNO students, faculty and staff aware of what's happening on their campus has been made a lot easier with the cooperation and assistance provided by UNO's public relations department.

STAFF EDITORIAL

Recently, that assistance was apparent when Chancellor Del Weber announced the planning of UNO doctoral programs. University Relations representatives recently made Weber's press release public, and the Gateway got it before anyone else.

Such cooperation also was exhibited when the shooting incident occurred in the Student Center last fall. Lou Cartier, University Relations director, was responsive and accessible to Gateway reporters, and he seemed to have made a conscious effort to keep us aware of how the university was reacting to the violence on campus.

Besides assisting the staff with vital issues occurring on campus, University Relations sends the Gateway dozens of press releases each week. Maybe that's its job, but other organizations on and off campus have not been as helpful in sending information to its campus press.

Whenever a staff member needed a photo or even a possible story idea, Tim Fitzgerald, director of University Relations' media bureau, has been quick to offer assistance.

That helpfulness is well-appreciated by this staff.

And now, the Gateway is receiving that same cooperation with another university public relations department.

Since beginning our Med Pulse section this semester, the University of Nebraska Medical Center's Office of Public Affairs also has provided the Gateway with that same assistance.

Tom O'Connor and Steve Beideck of the Medical Center's public affairs staff have helped in coordinating the Med Pulse section since it began.

It has been service that, we believe, has gone "beyond the call of duty." That service also has made our "duties" a little easier.

Let's keep the relations going.

Staff meeting over rice cakes and diet soda

Someone at the Omaha World-Herald must like us.

Unbeknownst to us, the Herald, under its own volition, has in some way, shape or form given us at least five nods of recognition within the last two weeks.

Friday, Feb. 16: World-Herald Sports Editor Mike Kelly informs Omaha on the Gateway Tony Barone controversy. Quotes from the Feb. 13 Gateway editorial are used. Gary Anderson, UNO Sports Information Director, tells the Mavs' side of things. We waited for Kelly's call. It didn't come. We weren't worried.

Saturday, Feb. 17: The Editorial Page briefly quoted the Feb. 9 Gateway Editorial concerning the "Franklin Five" and the automatic assumption anyone rich or famous was linked to the scandal. Omaha had been informed again. We appreciated the exposure, but we were getting curious: What were they up to?

Sunday, Feb. 18: The Living Today section, front page, featured a story on college slang with a sidebar by Herald writer Rhonda Stansberry. She had called the Gateway editor, Eric Stoakes, for her information. He gave her some colorful terms. Again, Omaha was informed. The staff as a whole, now, was concerned. What was the impetus behind Stansberry's questioning of Stoakes? Who put her up to it?

Friday, Feb. 23: Kelly again makes a reference to "Baronegate" as being the reason behind the UNO Mavericks recent basketball success. We were puzzled by this one, and then it became apparent: It was another attempt to inform Omaha of our paper. We were stunned. What would be next, and what was the Herald's motive?

DAVE MANNING COLUMNIST

Saturday, Feb. 24: From out of left field, the Herald editorial staff burst forth with an editorial supporting the Gateway staff with respect to the Barone-Maverick connection. They went as far as saying the paper was in good hands. We were stumped. Another attempt to inform Omaha of our existence, nay, our importance by the local daily. What was the underlying theme?

We had a staff meeting over diet Seven-Up and rice cakes. We discussed the alternatives, weighed our answers, plotted out the instances. I even went as far as to make a graph.

The answer, after much deliberation, was clearly indecipherable. After hours, we came upon three possible scenarios:

■The Omaha World-Herald doesn't like us, and is trying to convince Omaha (and our advertisers) that we are making too much news on our own. Our youthful rebellion, our idealism and our general goodness were being presented to the community for examination and judgment. We wondered: Could any effort like this even hope to work against us? Undoubtedly, the people like us more.

■The Omaha World-Herald doesn't really care about us at all, and the aforementioned instances are merely coincidences. Maybe the editor doesn't know all these isolated instances have occurred. We leaned towards this alternative, but rejected it as inconclusive. The editor should know what's going on the Sports, Living Today and Editorial pages, shouldn't he?

■The Omaha World-Herald does like us, which immediately drew our suspicion. What do they want? Granted, we have more style than they do, but we're also smaller. We were perplexed. Are they after our writers? Our editorial prowess? Our columnists? Our Macintoshes?

We couldn't decide. We fretted. And finally, we succumbed.

Maybe they were just trying to fill space.

Mock Trial Team goes to court

Guilty, guilty, guilty, guilty.

That's what UNO's Mock Trial team heard after the sixth annual National Intercollegiate Mock Trial tournament at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa Feb. 17 and 18.

The tournament, which fielded 88 teams from across the country, offered a fictional case tried by each team. Team members played either witnesses or attorneys.

"It is a great learning experience," said Kent Kirwan, a UNO political science professor and one of the UNO team coaches. "It really puts you on the griddle to see how you react to a pressure situation."

During the competition, each school participated against another team in four trials, two by the defense and two by the prosecution.

The teams were rated by Iowa judges and attorneys for the strength and presentation of their arguments. The finalists will try the case before the Iowa Supreme Court.

UNO's team members were: Susan Allen, Teresa Houser, Ralph Monico and Patrick Runge on the prosecution and Paula Effle, Roger Grandgenett and Ted Tuel representing the defense. The team was coached by Kirwan and Michael Goodwillie, a local attorney.

This year's fictional case was State of New Columbia vs. Dale Badger.

In the case, Badger was charged with murder after his lupohound, a large guard dog, attacked and killed a 13-year-old boy who was throwing snowballs at Badger's house.

The case hinged on whether or not the prosecution could prove Badger gave the command for the dog to attack or whether the dog attacked on its own.

The prosecution attempted to portray Badger as an intolerant person who overreacted to harmless pranks. The defense tried to show Badger as a victim of constant harassment who could get not help from anyone except a trainer who sold him a dog he couldn't handle.

The possible verdicts, in order of severity, were murder, voluntary manslaughter, involuntary manslaughter and not guilty.

UNO's prosecution got convictions of involuntary manslaughter against Northwestern University and voluntary manslaughter against the University of Dayton. UNO's defense finished with two involuntary manslaughter convictions against Bellarmine and Marycrest colleges.

"It would have been very difficult for anyone to get a murder or a not guilty ruling," Goodwillie said. "Voluntary manslaughter should probably be viewed as a victory for the prosecution while involuntary should be viewed as a win for the defense."

Final standings will be released next week. UNO, which has competed in the tournament for the past five years, finished outside the top 10 this year.

Administrator fulfills a dream

By DAVE MANNING

Charles Andrews knew all along he would become a doctor. At least subconsciously.

Andrews, the University of Nebraska Medical Center chancellor, may not have directly aspired to become a physician, but he made it nonetheless.

"In the eighth grade, I wrote an essay on why I wanted to be a doctor," he said. Growing up in Oklahoma, he said he had always been interested in things scientific.

During World War II, Andrews, like many of his high school classmates, took the Army Specialized Training Program test. He said the results indicated he would make a good engineer.

"The day I became 18, I was drafted into the Army," he said. Thoughts of college were put aside as he was sent to Fort Hood, Texas for infantry basic training.

Andrews, however, didn't stay long.

"They said, 'Well, you're going to college.'"

Andrews said he soon found himself in New York City's Greenwich Village. He was sent by the Army to New York University (NYU).

On an accelerated program, Andrews and his fellow soldiers were tested weekly by the university and the Army. One day, however, the test was a little different.

"There was a box asking whether you wanted to be a doctor," Andrews said. "I checked 'yes.'"

A few days later, every man who hadn't checked the box was sent back to the infantry. Out of about 2,000 soldiers, Andrews said about 80 had checked the box.

After a few months in NYU's pre-med program, his class was split among several universities.

"There was no choice where you went to school," Andrews said. Among such universities as Tufts and Harvard, Andrews was sent to Boston University and discharged from the Army as a freshman.

The war was over, but Andrews was allowed to stay, and he became a physician in 1949. He went to Kansas University (KU) to study internal medicine and complete his residency.

and Andrews was still eligible for the draft. He chose instead to volunteer for the U.S. Air Force and spent two years in Korea.

After his tour of duty, he continued his studies, focusing on pulmonary diseases at the University of Minnesota. By 1961 he was back at KU as a faculty member.

Drug abuse among med students targeted

By KENT WALTON

The University of Nebraska Medical Center has received a $100,000 federal grant to form a substance abuse referral program.

However, this grant is not to help the patients. It's for the students.

The two-year grant from the U.S. Department of Education, was awarded to the Medical Center following a joint study with the Creighton University School of Medicine.

The study, conducted at both medical centers, did not show a large number of medical students with substance abuse problems, according to Kathy Kriegler, project coordinator for alcohol and drug abuse prevention at the Medical Center.

However, the study still raised some concerns.

"Our concern is although the incidence in that study was slightly lower than the national average, any incidence in the health care professions is too much," she said.

To better assess the problem at the Medical Center, a survey was distributed to all full-time students and faculty in January. However, the results have not been completely studied, Kriegler said.

Drug use reported in the survey probably began before the students enrolled at the Medical Center, according to Dr. Jeffrey Baldwin, associate director of pharmacy practice and the project director for the substance abuse program.

Baldwin said most students are not lured to the health care professions by easy access to prescription medication.

"I don't think we are attracting pharmacy students for the access to the drugs," Baldwin said. "You might be led down the road to believe if I have a pharmacy license or a medical degree, I will have access to those drugs, but most of our people don't develop those habits while they are in school."

Baldwin said the grant will be used to refer students to the appropriate treatment agencies.

"The three things we want to do are educate the students, provide student assistance and help get the health professionals into the drug-education process," Baldwin said.

Although education is one goal of the project, Baldwin said additional classes will not be added.

Instead, Baldwin said he would rather see the current curriculum updated.

"What we want to do is identify areas in the curricula to insure the professionals have an adequate education to diagnose substance abuse problems," he said.

Kriegler agreed that the problem goes beyond physicians using drugs — it includes physicians who cannot diagnose substance abuse-related illnesses.

According to a 1982 AMA (American Medical Association) poll, 71 percent of physicians surveyed felt incompetent about treating alcoholism or substance abuse, Kriegler said.

A similar study of medical students discovered that out of about 220 third-year medical students, only 20 percent could diagnose chemical dependency, she said.

A medical student diagnosed as chemically dependent needs to be aware of the help that is available, Baldwin said.

"I think the perception that most students believe is if they get caught they are out of school," he said. "Our message to them is there are resources available to get them help. The bottom line is this should be treated as just another illness."

Kriegler said that the program is in the developmental stages, and students who are currently seeking help should contact the Student Counseling Center.

HEALTH SCOPE

INFORMATION FROM THE MEDICAL CENTER

Got clots; who you gonna call?

A diverse group of medical specialists, the University of Nebraska Medical Center "clot busters," are developing new ways to prevent blood clots from forming.

The specialists also aim to eliminate clots that develop in older patients following hip or cancer surgery.

Dr. William Haire, an internal medicine specialist at the Medical Center, said the Medical Center is one of 16 sites around the country working on blood clots.

"We know that if we don't do something to prevent blood clots from occurring, up to 70 percent of patients having hip surgery will develop blood clots, and three to five percent of them will die," Haire said.

Student invents technique

Eric Johnson, a senior at the University of Nebraska Medical Center's Lincoln campus, has developed a technique that can provide dentists with a cross-sectional view through the jaw.

The technique enables dentists to measure the distance between the structures found in the jaw.

Johnson believes his technique, called Computer-Aided Rotational Imaging (CARI), will offer a more affordable way to obtain images of the jaw.

"My goal was to provide the dentist with a more cost-effective, three-dimensional view of the internal anatomy of the lower jaw and to reduce the complications that result from common-jaw surgery," Johnson said.

Currently, dentists use a relatively expensive procedure to obtain a three-dimensional view of the jaw. What makes the CARI technique so affordable, Johnson said, is it can be performed with standard dental X-ray equipment.

Rural dentists needed

Stephen Leeper, dean of the College of Dentistry at the University of Nebraska Medical Center's Lincoln campus, has announced that the college will join the Rural Health Opportunities Program.

The program, which allows freshmen at Chadron State to be assured a position in the Medical Center's College of Medicine before they begin their undergraduate studies, was developed last October.

Next fall, two students will be admitted to the College of Dentistry after completing three years of courses at Chadron State.

After their first year of classes at the College of Dentistry, they will receive a bachelor of arts degree from Chadron State.

"We're looking for students with academic potential who are committed to returning to the rural areas of Nebraska to become dentists," Leeper said.

many West Virginia coal miners, were just starting to emerge.

"They were just starting a four-year medical school, and you don't get a chance like that too often," he said.

Shortly after he arrived, however, the vice president for health services at West Virginia died of a heart attack. Andrews became acting vice president until a replacement could be found.

Andrews was the eventual replacement and stayed at the school for 13 years.

"You make a lot of friends and begin to believe everything you do is right," he said. In an attempt to avoid that scenario, he resigned as vice president and joined the school's faculty.

Looking back on it, Andrews said switching back to a faculty position may not have been such a good idea. "I was probably better as an administrator."

When the chancellor's job at the University of Nebraska Medical Center opened up in 1981, Andrews looked into it. "I liked them, and they liked me," he said.

Almost 10 years later, Andrews is still at the Medical Center as an administrator — not a teacher.

"I'm totally out of date now," he said. "I try to keep up, but I wouldn't impose myself on students or patients."

Since his arrival, the Medical Center has seen a period of constant growth and advancement, culminating in the still uncompleted outpatient clinic and parking garage.

"I think I came here at an opportune time," Andrews said. By the late 1970s, the emphasis of the university had begun to shift toward research.

"They put the background into place so we could do all the things we do," he said. Although the size of the Medical Center's faculty has decreased within the last 10 years, it is more research oriented now, Andrews said.

"In a state of 1.5 million people, there are only so many resources. We've had to cut some programs," he said. "You have to build on your strengths."

"As this part gets better, everything else gets better," he explained. "If there are limited resources, you have to look around and work with other people."

Currently, the Medical Center has a joint psychiatry program with Creighton University. The Medical Center also shares an international affairs program with UNO. "It has to be a 'win-win' situation for both groups," Andrews said.

The Medical Center isn't just a learning institution, Andrews said, and it isn't just a hospital.

Andrews stressed the importance of the relationship between a patient and a student in any of the Medical Center's colleges.

"Patients, in my opinion, get better care when students are involved," he said. "They get second and third opinions on every encounter."

SPORTS OPINION BY TONY FLOTT

That dirty four-letter word

Don't say that dirty four-letter word around me.

That's right, the NCAA.

After listening to a panel recently discuss the state of Division I collegiate athletics, my stomach is curdling.

But is the problem just with the NCAA?

What about our presidents, who are just as much to blame for this sordid mess?

Take for instance the pressure to win, an evil our presidents unnecessarily bring about.

No matter where you go, if a coach doesn't win, he's out of a job.

In order to win, you have to have the horses to do it. In order to get the really good players, something special must be offered since most schools are basically the same.

That little something is usually illegal. Money, a car, clothes, anything that will entice these impressionable young men.

It's a sleazy way to recruit players, but what else can you do if you're going to get axed?

Do you think Tom Osborne, the University of Nebraska's head football coach, would still be around if he didn't win 10 games a year? Nine? Eight? Where's the cut-off?

In amateur sports a coaches job shouldn't be just winning. His time, even at the collegiate level, should be spent teaching the fundamentals and helping his players mature.

If the wins come, fine. If they don't, that's just part of life. There's a winner and a loser, but you have to learn from both sides.

One point brought up at the panel was the case of coaches being allowed to make hundreds of thousands of dollars on shoe endorsements.

If a coach has his team wear a certain brand of shoe, he receives a stipend, usually exceeding the worth of his contract with the school.

Why would the coach get that money and not the University? The athletic department is the one paying for the shoes, not the coach, so it follows that the money should go to the University.

It's just another sign of our basketball and football teams at the collegiate level quickly becoming professionalized.

When did we get away from the original idea of amateur sports being there to benefit the individual and not the University?

It all boils down to money and prestige. What University president would turn down the chance to make millions in television contracts or bowl revenue?

Not many would, but they're doing it at the expense of the athletes.

It is also perplexing that all of the legislation now being discussed and passed directly affects these same athletes.

Yet has anyone formed a committee of student athletes capable of representing their brethren or having a say in their future?

No, and they never will because they have no control over the money flow.

Maybe it's time the players unionized. It might not be too far in the future.

UNO coach Bob Hanson and North Dakota State coach Erv Inniger shake each other's hands following an 88-66 Mav blowout of the Bison.

Mav cagers alone in first place for the 6-foot-7 forward who has hit the last-second shots in three of UNO's last four games.

"Danny deserves it," Hanson said. "He's endured for three years and he's kind of a cornerstone of our program. He's unselfish."

The Mavs' comeback came after they wasted a 10-point lead at 66-56.

The two teams were tied at 82 points when Vonesh hit two baskets, putting the Sioux up 86-82.

Neal answered back with a long three-pointer to draw the Mavs to within one and set up Olson's game-winner.

"I thought we played well," Hanson said. "I think North Dakota is a heck of a team, they've got a lot of weapons."

The Sioux's main weapon, Vonesh, nearly single-handedly kept the Bison in contention throughout the game.

"He's the best ball player I've ever played against," UNO forward Troy Deane said. "He's strong, but he still has a soft shot."

UNO was led by Henderson who finished with a career-high 28 points. Neal added 21 points and six steals, while Olson ended up with 13 points and a team-high nine rebounds.

A season-high crowd of 3,350 showed up the following night to watch Bob Hanson notch his biggest win ever over North Dakota State.

The Bison had beaten UNO 65-58 earlier in the year with the game ending in controversy.

After an argument over who belonged at the free-throw line, Hanson ended on the floor, alleging Bison coach Erv Inniger shoved him.

Olson, however, said revenge was not a factor in Saturday's game.

"I don't think there's any grudge match," Olson said. "We just looked at the game and they just beat us bad. That's all we wanted to do here was beat them bad."

Inniger said the play of UNO's guards Henderson and Neal was the key in the outcome.

"Their guards played a lot better than they did against us last time," Inniger said. "They're the key to the success of their ball club."

Henderson finished the game with 15 points while Neal had a team-high 22 points and seven assists.

"I thought tonight he penetrated under control much better than he has," Hanson said of Neal.

UNO, which improved to 20-6 overall and 13-4 in the NCC, didn't begin to pull away from the Bison until the second half after leading 38-33 at intermission.

Inniger said the score should not have been that close.

"We were really very fortunate to be in the ball game the first half," Inniger said. "We only shot 31 percent."

Despite the Bison's low shot percentage, Hanson said he still had concerns.

"Our defense has been pretty good," Hanson said. "But they were getting a lot of penetration on us the first half and we limited that in the second half. That was the thing that concerned me."

The win kept UNO in first place in the NCC, a half-game ahead of North Dakota. With a UNO victory over Northern Colorado Sunday, the Mavs can do no worse than tie for the league title.

"It feels good," Olson said. "This team's coming together right now. We've got a goal to make the NCAA tournament."

UNO will host a first-round game for the NCC tournament starting March 6.

"The kids believe in themselves," Hanson said.

Grapplers upended as Bison win NCC

BY JIM ANDERSON

The UNO wrestling team discovered that some things never change.

For the ninth consecutive year, North Dakota State won the North Central Conference Tournament, edging the Mavs 65-58.25.

UNO Coach Mike Denney said the loss resulted from a lack of consistency.

"We had a lot of up and down performances," Denney said. "We were disappointed. We thought we had a chance to do it and we didn't."

UNO entered the tournament ranked second in NCAA Division II while North Dakota State came in ranked fourth.

Despite the loss, the Mavs still captured some highlights.

UNO will send six wrestlers to this weekend's Division II tournament in Kenosha, Wis.

Two Mavs, Scott Ruff and Joe Wypiszenski, won their respective weight classes qualifying them for the national tournament.

Ruff won the 142-pound division with a 4-1 decision over Jeff Becker of Augustana. Ruff, a junior, improved his record to 32-5-1.

Wypiszenski won the 177-pound title with a decision over Brian Loeffler of South Dakota, running his record to 31-4-3.

Denney said Ruff and Wypiszenski could earn No. 1 seeds for the national tournament.

Four other Mav wrestlers will be headed for the Division II championships after finishing third in their division.

Ron Higdon at 126 pounds, Mark Passer at 134 pounds, Larry Thompson at 150 pounds and Pat Gentzler at 190 pounds all took third place in the NCC after losing semifinal matches.

"We have six really good people going. We thought we'd get at least eight," Denney said. "We didn't wrestle poorly. We were a match away from winning the whole thing."

UNO's four third-place finishers all had close matches.

Higdon lost to North Dakota State's Wayne Werner 3-2, while Passer took Mike Pantoya of Northern Colorado into overtime before losing.

Thompson lost to Chad Gutenhauf of South Dakota State in the last 5 seconds and Gentzler lost by two points to North Dakota State's Brian Nelson.

"It's disappointing to lose that many close ones," Denney said. "The guys wanted to win but we just couldn't get an edge."

Despite the close losses, the Mavs received no wild cards for the Division II tournament.

NCC coaches determine which five wrestlers not placing in the top three deserve wild cards.

"We were the team to beat, but no one would give us anything," Denney said.

Jane, as in your case, sometimes an abortion is necessary to save the mother's life. Certainly then the intent is to save both lives if possible. However, in over 1,400,000 U.S. abortions each year, the intent is to kill the unborn baby for the convenience of the mother. This is truly sad and makes the right of convenience greater than the right to live. Bill.
